"One of the odd things that I saw in a trip up the east coast of Africa was the permission given each day by one of the kings for the sun to set," said a man who made a trip to South Africa.
"At one of the ports where we stopped the soldiers were drawn up on the parade ground before the royal palace as the sun was setting. With pomp and ceremony the ruler advanced to the front of the balcony on the second floor and majestically waved his hand toward the sun. "One of his subjects explained to me that it was the royal sanction for the run to set. When asked as to whether the ruler gave his permission for the sun to rise in the morning the man replied that the sun must always rise be-fore the ruler, but that it could never go down unless the royal hand waved approval. The king who did this was the sultan of Zanzibar.

"I hardly believe that he himself was sincere in thinking his permission necessary, for he was educated for four years at Harrow college in England, but the performance was to increase the belief among the subjects in his di-vine origin."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Fresh Water Pearls.

The river mussel and some other fresh water bivalves often contain beautiful pearls. In Saxony the trade in these dates from 1610 and a code of rules to regulate it. The fish are placed in prepared beds and examined every five years. From two to ten pearls are rielded by each. A similar and profitable pearl cultivation is carried on in Sweden and in other parts of Europe. The fact that grains of sand and other foreign substances that intrude within the shells are covered in course of time with layers of pearl has been taken advantage of by the wily Chinese. Opening the shells of suitable blvalves and holding them open with wooden wedges, they insert small objects of wood, stone or metal and restore the shellfish uninjured to their beds. Irritated by these pieces, the mollusks soon cover them with coatings of mother-of-peari of bright purity and luster and thus convert them into articles of con-siderable commercial value.—London
